The National Endowment for the Arts is a public agency dedicated to supporting excellence in the arts—both new and established—bringing the arts to all Americans, and providing leadership in arts education. Established by Congress in 1965 as an independent agency of the federal government, the Endowment is the nation's largest annual funder of the arts, bringing great art to all 50 states, including rural areas, inner cities, and military bases.

The Institute of Museum and Library Services is the primary source of federal support for the nation's 122,000 libraries and 17,500 museums. The Institute's mission is to create strong libraries and museums that connect people to information and ideas. The Institute works at the national level and in coordination with state and local organizations to sustain heritage, culture, and knowledge; enhance learning and innovation; and support professional development.

Arts Midwest connects people throughout the Midwest and the world to meaningful arts opportunities, sharing creativity, knowledge, and understanding across boundaries. Based in Minneapolis, Arts Midwest connects the arts to audiences throughout the nine-state region of Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Michigan, Minnesota, North Dakota, Ohio, South Dakota, and Wisconsin. One of six non-profit regional arts organizations in the United States, Arts Midwest's history spans more than 25 years.

Additional support for The Big Read has also been provided by the W.K. Kellogg Foundation.

“San Francisco’s night-fog, thin, clammy, and penetrant, blurred the street. A few yards from where Spade had dismissed the taxicab a small group of men stood looking up an alley. Two women stood with a man on the other side of Bush Street, looking at the alley. There were faces at windows.”

Introduction

Welcome to The Big Read, a major initiative from the National Endowment for the Arts designed to revitalize the role of literary reading in American culture. The Big Read hopes to unite communities through great literature, as well as inspire students to become lifelong readers.

This Big Read Teacher’s Guide contains ten lessons to lead you through Dashiell Hammett’s classic novel, The Maltese Falcon. Each lesson has four sections: a focus topic, discussion activities, writing exercises, and homework assignments. In addition, we have provided capstone projects and suggested essay topics, as well as handouts with more background information about the novel, the historical period, and the author. All lessons dovetail with the state language arts standards required in the fiction genre.

The Big Read teaching materials also include a CD. Packed with interviews, commentaries, and excerpts from the novel, The Big Read CD presents first-hand accounts of why Hammett’s novel remains so compelling more than seven decades after its initial publication. Some of America’s most celebrated writers, scholars, and actors have volunteered their time to make Big Read CDs exciting additions to the classroom.

Finally, The Big Read Reader’s Guide deepens your exploration with interviews, booklists, timelines, and historical information. We hope this guide and syllabus allow you to have fun with your students while introducing them to the work of a great American author.

From the NEA, we wish you an exciting and productive school year.

1
Day One
FOCUS: Biography
Activities: Listen to The Big Read CD. Write a two-page second chapter to begin to develop one of the characters.
Homework: Read Chapters 1–3 (pp. 3–31). *

2
Day Two
FOCUS: Culture and History
Activities: Read Handout One and Handout Two. Discuss the trends in culture and history of the era.
Homework: Read Chapters 4–6 (pp. 32–60).

3
Day Three
FOCUS: Narrative and Point of View
Activities: Discuss why Hammett chose to limit the reader’s access to the characters by using the objective point of view. Rewrite the featured scene from first-person point of view.
Homework: Read Chapters 7–9 (pp. 61–89).

4
Day Four
FOCUS: Characters
Activities: Have students discuss the key attributes of an assigned character. Write an essay on a secondary character who serves as an antagonist to Sam Spade.
Homework: Read Chapters 10–11 (pp. 90–111).

5
Day Five
FOCUS: Figurative Language
Activities: Discuss the meaning of the Flitcraft parable. Write a two-page parable.
Homework: Read Chapters 12–14 (pp. 112–139).

6  Day Six
FOCUS: Symbols
Activities: Read Handout Three. Discuss what abstract ideas each of the characters might personify if the novel is read as an allegory.
Homework: Read Chapters 15–17 (pp. 140–171).

7  Day Seven
FOCUS: Character Development
Activities: Discuss with your students the roles of “flat” and “round” characters. Write about the character who is most trustworthy.
Homework: Chapters 18–20 (pp. 172–217).

8  Day Eight
FOCUS: The Plot Unfolds
Activities: Map a timeline depicting the development of the story. Write a different ending to the novel.
Homework: Outline the three major themes of the novel.

9  Day Nine
FOCUS: Themes of the Novel
Activities: Discuss themes of greed, trust, and human adaptability.
Homework: Part Three. Begin working on essays.

10 Day Ten
FOCUS: What Makes a Book Great?
Activities: Explore the qualities of a great novel.
Homework: Finish essays.
Examining an author’s life can inform and expand the reader’s understanding of a novel. Biographical criticism is the practice of analyzing a literary work through the lens of an author’s experience. In this lesson, explore the author’s life to understand the novel more fully.

Born in St. Mary’s County, Maryland, in 1894, Dashiell Hammett left school at age fourteen because of his family’s shaky finances. He held a series of odd jobs until 1915, when he joined the Baltimore office of the famous Pinkerton’s National Detective Service. Plagued by ill health, he left the detective agency for good in 1921. His first work was published in 1922. A year later, his fiction appeared in the popular pulp magazine Black Mask.

Discussion Activities

Listen to The Big Read CD. Students should take notes as they listen. Ask them to present the three most important points they learned from the CD.

Photocopy the Reader’s Guide essays, “Dashiell Hammett 1894–1961” (pp. 5–7) and “Hammett and His Other Works” (pp. 10–11). Divide the class into groups. Assign one essay to each group. After reading and discussing the essays, each group will present what it learned.

Writing Exercise

Have students read Chapter 1 (pp. 3–10) focusing on Hammett’s use of dialogue. Ask students to write a two-page second chapter to begin to develop one of the characters. Ask them to use dialogue and action.

Homework

Continue to read Chapters 1–3 (pp. 3–31). Prepare your students to read two or three chapters per night in order to finish reading the book in seven lessons. Hammett begins the novel in the middle of a typical workday at Spade and Archer’s detective agency. What clues indicate that some things are out of the ordinary? How might these clues foreshadow the rest of the story?
Cultural and historical contexts give birth to the dilemmas and themes at the center of the novel. Studying these contexts and appreciating intricate details of the time and place help readers understand the motivations of the characters.

_The Maltese Falcon_ was written in the late 1920s, the close of a decade known as the “Roaring Twenties,” a period of prosperity halted by the stock market crash in October 1929. During this decade, writers such as Ernest Hemingway and F. Scott Fitzgerald captured the disillusionment of the Lost Generation. In Fitzgerald’s _The Great Gatsby_, the main character struggles between riches and happiness. Hemingway’s _A Farewell to Arms_ captures the life of an American soldier, fighting for another country, adrift in Europe.

At the same time, American pulp magazines were at the height of their popularity. The publications were an inexpensive way for readers to enjoy new stories each month. Hammett’s style, developed while writing for pulps like _Black Mask_, dealt indirectly with such serious themes as alienation and the allure of the American dream. Foremost, Hammett wrote captivating mysteries to entertain the reader, and any grand aesthetic goals or existential dilemmas shadowed along behind. With the coming of the Depression, this entertaining fiction was just what the nation would need.

Discussion Activities

Read and discuss Handout One, Handout Two, and the Reader’s Guide essay “Hammett and Detective Fiction” (pp. 8–9). Discuss the trends covered on the audio CD and in these essays. What major facts from these resources might inform your reading of the novel?

Homework

Have students read Chapters 4–6 (pp. 32–60). Ask them to consider the voice of the narrator. Who is telling the story? Is the narrator objective or biased? How does this contribute to the tone of the novel?
FOCUS: Narrative and Point of View

The narrator tells the story with a specific perspective informed by his or her beliefs and experiences. Narrators can be major or minor characters, or exist outside the story altogether. The narrator weaves her or his point of view, including ignorance and bias, into telling the tale. A first-person narrator participates in the events of the novel, using “I.” A distanced narrator, often not a character, is removed from the action of the story and uses the third-person (he, she, and they). The distanced narrator may be omniscient, able to read the minds of all the characters, or limited, describing only certain characters’ thoughts and feelings. Ultimately, the type of narrator determines the point of view from which the story is told.

_The Maltese Falcon_ employs a third-person objective point of view. The narrator is not a character and does not participate in the events of the novel. Instead, the narrator simply tells what happens without stating more than can be inferred from the story’s action and dialogue. Using this device, the narrator never discloses anything about what the characters think or feel and remains a detached observer.

Discussion Activities

While the objective point of view relies heavily on action and dialogue, Hammett gives us clues to the characters’ thoughts and feelings by describing their body language and facial expressions. Examine the scene in Chapter 6 where Sam tells Brigid that Joel Cairo offered him money for the falcon.

“He offered me five thousand dollars for the black bird.”

She started, her teeth tore at the end of her cigarette, and her eyes, after a swift alarmed glance at Spade, turned away from him.

“You’re not going to go around poking at the fire and straightening up the room again, are you?” he asked lazily.

She laughed a clear merry laugh, dropped the mangled cigarette into a tray, and looked at him with clear merry eyes (p. 56).

How does Hammett’s description of Spade and Brigid’s reactions to one another help the reader infer the characters’ feelings? Why might Hammett have chosen to limit the reader’s access to the characters’ private thoughts and emotions? How does the emotional distance it creates contribute to the overall tone of the novel?

Writing Exercise

First-person point of view allows the reader to observe the private thoughts and emotions of the narrator. Ask students to rewrite the scene above in first-person point of view from Sam Spade’s or Brigid O’Shaughnessy’s perspective. How does the use of first person change the tone of the scene?

Homework

Have students read Chapters 7–9 (pp. 61–89). Make a list of all the new characters in this chapter. Can we discern the inner motivations of these characters?

National Endowment for the Arts
The central character in a work of literature is called the protagonist. The protagonist usually initiates the main action of the story and often overcomes a flaw, such as weakness or ignorance, to achieve a new understanding by the work’s end. A protagonist who acts with great honor or courage may be called a hero. An antihero is a protagonist lacking these qualities. Instead of being dignified, brave, idealistic, or purposeful, the antihero may be cowardly, self-interested, or weak. The protagonist’s journey is enriched by encounters with characters who hold differing beliefs. One such character type, a foil, has traits that contrast with the protagonist’s and highlight important features of the main character’s personality. The most important foil, the antagonist, opposes the protagonist, barring or complicating his or her success.

Sam Spade, the hard-boiled detective in The Maltese Falcon, becomes embroiled in the quest for the elusive black bird after his partner, Miles Archer, is murdered. Throughout most of the novel, Spade’s motivations remain private, but most critics agree that he is driven by a personal moral code—an internal sense of right and wrong—rather than a conventional desire to uphold civil law. In various ways the secondary characters serve as foils and antagonists to Spade’s character, complicating his search for Archer’s killer and the falcon.

Discussion Activities

Divide the class into groups. Photocopy the Reader’s Guide essay “Major Characters in the Novel” (p. 4). Assign each group a character: Effie Perine, Brigid O’Shaughnessy, Miles Archer, Joel Cairo, Casper Gutman, or Wilmer. Some of these characters lie about who they are and what they know. Ask students to review the chapters they have read, selecting passages that reveal information about the true nature of their character. Have them present the key attributes of that character, giving specific evidence from the text to support their answers.

Writing Exercise

Choose a secondary character who serves as an antagonist to Sam Spade. How is this person important to the story? What motivates him or her? Does the antagonist make Spade appear stronger or more flawed? How might this be important as the novel progresses?

Homework

Have students read Chapters 10–11 (pp. 90–111). Ask your students to consider what Spade’s reaction to Casper Gutman reveals about Spade’s character.
Writers use figurative language such as imagery, similes, and metaphors to help the reader visualize and experience events and emotions in a story. Some figurative language asks us to stretch our imaginations, finding the likeness in seemingly unrelated things.

A metaphor is a statement that one thing is something else that, in a literal sense, it is not. By asserting that a thing is something else, a metaphor creates a close association that underscores an important similarity between these two things. Allegories and parables are forms of extended metaphors. An allegory uses characters, objects, and events to symbolize concepts of moral or social significance. Characters in allegorical stories are often personifications of abstract ideas such as envy, greed, or gluttony. Parables are metaphorical stories that use realistic characters and circumstances to make a point. They often carry a strong message that has meaning beyond its literal reading.

One of the most famous and important passages of The Maltese Falcon is a section in Chapter 7 known as "the Flitcraft parable." Spade tells Brigid about a case he once worked on involving a man named Flitcraft who disappeared without warning. Hired by the wife to locate him, Spade finds him living—under an assumed name—a life very similar to the one he left behind. The man tells Spade that he was walking down the street after lunch one day when a beam fell "eight or ten stories down and smacked the sidewalk alongside him." Shortly afterward, the man left his family in an attempt to adjust his life to reflect his newfound understanding of the random nature of the universe. Spade tells Brigid, "He adjusted himself to beams falling, and then no more of them fell, and he adjusted himself to them not falling" (p. 64).

Discussion Activities

Discuss what the parable means. What concept is Spade trying to relate to Brigid? Why would Spade choose to tell Brigid this story at this particular moment? What message does the story carry? Does Brigid seem to understand?

Writing Exercise

Ask your students to write a short story of no more than two pages that functions as a parable. They should pay close attention to characterization and imagery. What makes the story a parable? How does it explain something about the world in which they live?

Homework

Read Chapters 12–14 (pp. 112–139). In tonight’s reading, the students will learn more about the history and value of the Maltese falcon. Ask them to begin thinking of the ways the falcon works as a symbol within the novel.
Symbols are persons, places, or things in a narrative that have significance beyond a literal understanding. The craft of storytelling depends on symbols to present ideas and point toward new meanings. Most frequently, a specific object will be used to refer to (or symbolize) a more abstract concept. The repeated appearance of an object suggests a non-literal, or figurative, meaning attached to the object. Symbols are often found in the book’s title, at the beginning and end of the story, within a profound action, or in the name or personality of a character. The life of a novel is perpetuated by generations of readers interpreting and reinterpreting the main symbols. By identifying and understanding symbols, readers can reveal new interpretations of the novel.

The most important symbol in The Maltese Falcon is the falcon itself, a statuette once given by the Knights of Rhodes to King Charles V of Spain. Gutman, Cairo, and Brigid O’Shaughnessy selfishly pursue their own interests as they try to obtain the bird. Driven by greed, they become mired in the quest for fortune without considering the cost. Spade becomes embroiled in the pursuit after his partner, Miles Archer, is murdered.

Discussion Activities

Read Handout Three. Ask your students to think of the novel as an allegory. How do the novel’s characters, objects, and events symbolize concepts of moral or social significance? Do their names provide any clues? Divide the class into four groups. Assign each group a character: Sam Spade, Casper Gutman, Joel Cairo, or Brigid O’Shaughnessy. If The Maltese Falcon is read as an allegory, what abstract ideas might each of these characters personify?

Writing Exercise

Ask your students to think about the qualities of a real falcon. Does the character they were assigned today share any of these characteristics? If so, what are they? Does the falcon represent different things to different characters? Have students support their answers with passages from the text.

Homework

Have students read Chapters 15–17 (pp. 140–171). Ask the students to pay close attention to the phone call Effie receives from Brigid and the scene with Rhea Gutman. Do they feel Brigid can be trusted? Why or why not?
Novels trace the development of characters who encounter a series of challenges. Most characters contain a complex balance of virtues and vices. Internal and external forces require characters to question themselves, overcome fears, or reconsider dreams. The protagonist may undergo profound change. A close study of character development maps, in each character, the evolution of motivation, personality, and belief. The tension between a character’s strengths and weaknesses keeps the reader guessing about what might happen next and the protagonist’s eventual success or failure.

“Flat” or “two-dimensional” characters in a work of fiction do not experience a profound emotional change and personal growth during the course of the story. They serve to provide comic relief or help advance the plot. “Round” or “three-dimensional” characters have complex emotions and motivations. They encounter conflict and are changed by it.

The archetypical private detective, Sam Spade is motivated not by conventional standards but by an internal code of conduct. Like the criminals he encounters while pursuing the falcon, Spade divulges only what suits his purposes. He tells each of them what he believes they want to hear without revealing how much of the truth he has pieced together from their various stories. His motivations remain a mystery until the end.

The classic femme fatale, Brigid is beautiful but dangerous. She lies compulsively, revealing bits of truth sandwiched between falsehoods. Brigid feigns loyalty to various characters, but ultimately she betrays them all.

Discussion Activities

Discuss with your students the roles of “flat” and “round” characters. Ask them to identify some of their favorite fictional characters. What attributes bring them to life? Some critics feel the characters in The Maltese Falcon lack depth. Do your students agree? Which characters in the novel seem the most “real”? Why? Using your discussion of allegory from Lesson Six, ask the students to consider how using two-dimensional characters can sometimes enable writers to represent broad concepts.

Writing Exercise

Ask the students to write two paragraphs about the characters they most trust. What particular actions or qualities contribute to that feeling? Have them support their answer with examples from the text.

Homework

Have students read Chapters 18–20 (pp. 172–217). Ask your students to come to class ready to present the two most important turning points in the novel.
The author crafts a plot structure to create expectations, increase suspense, and develop characters. The pacing of events can make a novel either predictable or riveting. Foreshadowing and flashbacks allow the author to defy the constraints of time. Sometimes an author can confound a simple plot by telling stories within stories. In a conventional work of fiction, the peak of the story’s conflict—the climax—is followed by the resolution, or denouement, in which the effects of that climactic action are presented.

The Maltese Falcon begins as a mystery novel, with the hard-boiled detective, Sam Spade, trying to solve his partner’s murder. It evolves into a quest for the falcon, of course, but also for abstract concepts such as truth and justice. The chase leads to a final truth: the statue is a fake, a worthless piece of lead. The criminals blame one another and, in the aftermath, Wilmer shoots Gutman. Though Spade admits he might be in love with Brigid, he turns her over to the police, unwilling to protect her from punishment for Miles Archer’s murder.

Discussion Activities

In small groups, have the students map a timeline that depicts the development of the story and the building of drama. This timeline should include the most significant turning points but also examine lesser events that build tension. As students develop their timelines, they should define the beginning, middle, and end of the novel. Groups will present their timelines to the class.

Writing Exercise

Ask your students to write a different ending to the novel.

Homework

Have your students come to class with three major themes of the novel.
Themes are the central, recurring subjects of a novel. As characters grapple with circumstances such as racism, class, or unrequited love, profound questions will arise in the reader's mind about human life, social pressures, and societal expectations. Classic themes include intellectual freedom versus censorship, the relationship between one's personal moral code and larger political justice, and spiritual faith versus rational considerations. A novel often reconsiders these age-old debates by presenting them in new contexts or from new points of view.

Discussion Activities and Writing Exercises

Use the following questions to stimulate discussion or provide writing exercises in order to interpret the novel in specific ways. Using textual references to support ideas, explore the statements The Maltese Falcon makes about the following:

- Greed: Gutman, Cairo, O'Shaughnessy, and Wilmer have been pursuing the falcon for quite some time. Spade has only recently joined the search. Discuss the various characters' motivations. Are Spade's more noble than the others? Why or why not?

- Trust: After Spade discovers some of Brigid's lies, she pleads with him, "I've been bad—worse than you could know—but I'm not all bad. Look at me, Mr. Spade. You know I'm not all bad, don't you? You can see that, can't you? Then can't you trust me just a little?" (p. 35).
  1. Why does Brigid want so desperately for Sam to trust her?
  2. Does she trust him? Why or why not?

- Human Adaptability: Throughout the novel, circumstances change that are beyond the control of the characters. The way they adapt (or cannot adapt) reveals a great deal about their personalities. Discuss the various ways the characters react to the following situations.
  1. Chapter 7. When Lieutenant Dundy and Tom Polhaus pay a surprise visit to Spade's apartment, Cairo, Brigid, and Spade each react quite differently. How does the action of each character advance the plot?
  2. Chapter 19. Using his knife, Gutman finds that the falcon is made of lead. How do the various characters react? Do any of their actions surprise you? Why or why not?

Homework

Have students begin their essays, using the essay topics at the end of this guide. Outlines are due at the next class.
Great stories articulate and explore the mysteries of our daily lives in the larger context of the human struggle. The writer's voice, style, and use of language inform the plot, characters, and themes. By creating opportunities to learn, imagine, and reflect, a great novel is a work of art that affects many generations of readers, changes lives, challenges assumptions, and breaks new ground.

Discussion Activities

Ask students to make a list of the characteristics of a great book. Put these on the board. What elevates a novel to greatness? Then ask them to discuss, within groups, other books that include some of the same characteristics. Do any of these books remind them of The Maltese Falcon? Is this a great novel?

A great writer can be the voice of a generation. What kind of voice does Hammett provide through the third-person objective narration of this hard-boiled detective novel? What does this voice tell us about the concerns and dreams of Hammett's generation?

Split the class into groups. Have each group choose the single most important theme of the novel. Ask a spokesperson from each group to explain his or her decision. Write these themes on the board. Are all the groups in agreement?

Writing Exercise

If you were the voice of your generation, what would be your most important message? Why might you choose to convey this in a novel rather than a speech or an essay? What story would you tell to get your point across?

Have students work on their essays in class. Be available to assist with outlines, drafts, and arguments. Have each student partner with another to edit outlines and rough drafts. Provide students with characteristics of a well-written essay.

Homework

Students should continue working on their essays. See the essay topics at the end of this guide. For additional questions, see the Reader's Guide "Discussion Questions" (p. 14). Turn in outlines and rough drafts for the next class.
The discussion activities and writing exercises in this guide provide you with possible essay topics, as do the Discussion Questions in the Reader's Guide. Advanced students can come up with their own essay topics, as long as they are specific and compelling. Other ideas for essays are provided here.

For essays, students should organize their ideas around a thesis—that is, an assertion—about the novel. This statement or thesis should be focused, with clear reasons supporting its conclusion. The thesis and supporting reasons should be backed by references to the text.

1. Write an essay about what motivates Sam Spade. Does he demonstrate commitment to his profession? If so, how? Is he a hero or an antihero? Which character most effectively serves as a foil to Spade? What personality traits make the foil effective? Are Spade and the foil more alike or different?

2. Sam Spade has three women in his life. Compare his relationships to Effie Perine, Iva Archer, and Brigid O'Shaughnessy. How are they similar? How are they different? Does Sam care for any of them, or is he simply using each to his own purposes? Does he trust any of them? Support your answers with examples from the text.

3. Write an essay that analyzes the relevance of the Flitcraft parable. What does it mean? What does it reveal about Sam Spade? Brigid O'Shaughnessy? How would the novel be different if Hammett had chosen not to include it?

4. Discuss the ways money motivates characters throughout the novel. Which characters seem most interested in money? The Maltese Falcon was published in 1930, the end of the decade known as the Roaring Twenties, a very prosperous period in our nation's history. Do you think Hammett is sending a moral message about the relentless pursuit of wealth? If so, what is that message?
Capstone Projects

Teachers may consider the ways in which these activities may be linked to other Big Read community events. Most of these projects could be shared at a local library, a student assembly, or a bookstore.

1. Have students re-enact several different scenes from the novel as they might be done in a new movie version. Ask them to write their lines in a script, paying close attention to the novel for clues as to stage direction and body language. Before each presentation, have a narrator explain the context of the scene.

2. Host a movie screening of the John Huston version of The Maltese Falcon at a local theatre. Invite a scholar to come to the screening and lead a discussion about the film’s interpretation of the novel.

3. Have students work together to produce an e-zine using pulp magazines as a model. A student (or group of students) should begin to serialize an original short story, complete with cliffhanger chapter endings. Have other students choose areas they would like to work on, such as graphics, editing, and layout. Post your e-zine on the school’s Web site.

4. Create a new cover for the novel. Display your students’ artwork at a local bookstore or Big Read sponsor.

5. Explore creative writing skills through the following exercises: (1) write a short story using mostly dialogue, (2) write a short story without depicting the main character’s personal history, or (3) write a detective story where the main character solves a mystery.
San Francisco in the Roaring Twenties

In 1920, more than half a million people lived in San Francisco, making it the twelfth-largest city in the United States. The city had rebuilt after the devastating 1906 earthquake and fire. As in the rest of America, many of the well-to-do were playing the stock market and drinking bootleg gin. Increases in manufacturing, especially of automobiles, were changing the American way of life. But the stock market crash of October 1929, which would herald the Great Depression, was lurking just around the corner.

All this fleeting prosperity had a flipside, and Fremont Older, editor of the San Francisco Call, exposed it in My Own Story, an account of his years on that paper’s city desk. An insider’s look at crime on the streets of San Francisco, these terse stories, originally serialized in his newspaper, included many intimate details that could only be published after the fact. The serials mesmerized San Francisco readers with a glimpse of their city’s corrupt politicians and crooked courts—a system easily glimpsed between the lines of The Maltese Falcon.

Geographically, the city was a different place from the one we know today. San Francisco Bay’s two great bridges didn’t go up until the 1930s. The 1920s were really the last decade in which the city stayed true to the one physical feature that originally induced people to settle there: namely, the greatest natural deep-water port on the West Coast. Cars were already menacing pedestrians in the city proper, the East Bay and Marin County, but driving from one of these places to another was virtually impossible. Instead, ferries transported people around the bay, and the Ferry Building at the foot of Market Street numbered among San Francisco’s greatest landmarks. It still does today, but as a gourmet mecca, not the teeming transportation center it was during the 1920s.

With easy air travel years away, the international steamship trade accounted for most of San Francisco’s foreign commerce. The Embarcadero, mostly a pedestrian and tourist destination nowadays, remained for decades a working waterfront. When Sam Spade checks the daily paper for the comings and goings of Captain Jacobi’s ship in The Maltese Falcon, this is no exaggeration. A San Francisco newspaper in the 1920s would no sooner omit the shipping news than a radio station today would discontinue its traffic reports.

In the era of The Maltese Falcon, San Francisco celebrated its diamond anniversary by tucking into a banquet of prosperity and expansion, with a pipping-hot side of debauchery. The stock market crash soon brought an end to what had appeared to be limitless growth for almost everyone—except, curiously, Dashiell Hammet. With the publication of The Maltese Falcon the following year, he was about to make his fortune as all around him were losing theirs.
Hard-Boiled Fiction and Hammett’s Writing Style

Hard-boiled fiction is a literary term describing unsentimental stories and novels about violence, corruption, and sex, particularly among society’s criminal element, and combining unflinching realism with an often flippant sense of humor. The name comes from hard-boiled eggs, whose last trace of softness has been thoroughly boiled out of them. The writing is gritty, understated, and tough. The stories are often set in large cities where graft and corruption are commonplace. The hard-boiled hero is usually a man at odds with society, whose motivation stems not from monetary reward but from a personal code and the search for truth.

Many hard-boiled detective novels were first published in serialized form in such pulp magazines as Black Mask and Dime Detective. Popular from the 1920s through the 1950s, pulp magazines took their name from the cheap wood-pulp paper on which they were printed.

In an era before television brought entertainment into American homes, short stories were commonly popular with the public. Hammett wrote more than eighty short stories and five novels. His stories were popular in the pulps, his serialized novels found mainstream publishers, and filmmakers have enthusiastically adapted his work to the screen. He is credited with bringing detective fiction from pulp into the literary mainstream.

His crisp writing style and use of slang brought the language of the streets to the page, creating an urban realism that registered strongly with the public. He developed his style by writing case reports during his stint as an operative for the Pinkerton National Detective Agency. This “just the facts” approach colored his writing, creating highly readable, fast-moving stories. Hammett strove for the highest standard in dialogue, setting, and pacing.

Stylistically he has been compared to his contemporary Ernest Hemingway because they share a similar minimalist approach to writing. Like Hemingway, Hammett employs a spare style with plain sentence structure and fairly accessible language. Both are considered masters of dialogue. Conversations in their books convey messages beyond the literal meaning of the page’s words.

But the pacing of Hammett’s writing and his penchant for hairpin plot turns are what first endeared him to readers of the pulps, and later to millions of fans of detective fiction. The Maltese Falcon has an intricate series of plot twists, but the story is told in a straightforward, uncomplicated way. Hammett’s style influenced a host of later writers of detective fiction, including Raymond Chandler, Ross Macdonald, Dorothy B. Hughes, and Walter Mosley.
The Falcon as a Symbol

The Maltese falcon really existed, if not in a form Hammett’s readers would recognize. It dates back to the Knights of Malta, a religious order founded as the Knights Hospitaller in the year 1080 to provide care for poor and sick pilgrims to Jerusalem. In 1530, Holy Roman Emperor Charles V of Spain gave the order a large territory, including Malta, in exchange for an annual fee of a single—live, not bejeweled—Maltese falcon. Even though it has no territory today, the order survives and is considered a sovereign state, with observer status at the United Nations.

Dashiell Hammett drew on the history of the Knights of Malta when creating the plot hook for The Maltese Falcon. He explained this historical influence by saying simply, “Somewhere I had read of the peculiar rental agreement between Charles V and the Order of the Hospital of Saint John of Jerusalem.” The Crusades probably intrigued Hammett because of their mythic association with the Holy Grail, the cup used by Jesus at the last supper. The association with the Crusades subtly elevates Sam Spade to a knight on a noble errand, a plot that intensifies the quest and, considering how ignoble many of Hammett’s characters are, mocks it at the same time.

Falconry, the sport of using trained birds to hunt small prey, dates back thousands of years. Well-trained birds were prized for their beauty, skill, and practicality. A fearsome hunter, the falcon has long been a symbol of prowess and ruthlessness—not unlike Sam Spade, the detective who pursues it in Hammett’s novel. Early Christians borrowed pagan symbols like the falcon but altered their meaning to reflect their own values. Because they are relentless hunters, wild falcons often symbolized evil, while tamed falcons represented Christian conversion and repentance. Coats of arms from the Middle Ages often included falcons as a symbol of a pursuer, one who will not rest until his objective is achieved. This single-minded imperviousness to distraction, too, should remind readers of Spade and his fellow falcon-hunters.

A valuable prize that everyone in a story is chasing, as with Hammett’s falcon, is sometimes called a “maguffin.” Film director Alfred Hitchcock popularized the term to describe the elusive objects that so many of his heroes and villains pursued. In each case, the nature of the object is less important than how much everyone wants it.

In the book, greed destroys any hope the characters have for contented lives, yet they cannot give up the chase. They are driven by uncontrollable yearnings that eat away at their humanity and contaminate relationships. Reversing the lead-into-gold transformation familiar from alchemy, the Maltese falcon has been reduced from gold to lead, and down with it go the lives of all who vainly chase it.

National Council of Teachers of English (NCTE) Standards*

1. Students read a wide range of print and non-print texts to build an understanding of texts, of themselves, and of the cultures of the United States and the world; to acquire new information; to respond to the needs and demands of society and the workplace; and for personal fulfillment. Among these texts are fiction and nonfiction, classic and contemporary works.

2. Students read a wide range of literature from many periods in many genres to build an understanding of the many dimensions (e.g., philosophical, ethical, aesthetic) of human experience.

3. Students apply a wide range of strategies to comprehend, interpret, evaluate, and appreciate texts. They draw on their prior experience, their interactions with other readers and writers, their knowledge of word meaning and of other texts, their word identification strategies, and their understanding of textual features (e.g., sound-letter correspondence, sentence structure, context, graphics).

4. Students adjust their use of spoken, written, and visual language (e.g., conventions, style, vocabulary) to communicate effectively with a variety of audiences and for different purposes.

5. Students employ a wide range of strategies as they write and use different writing process elements appropriately to communicate with different audiences for a variety of purposes.

6. Students apply knowledge of language structure, language conventions (e.g., spelling and punctuation), media techniques, figurative language, and genre to create, critique, and discuss print and non-print texts.

7. Students conduct research on issues and interests by generating ideas and questions, and by posing problems. They gather, evaluate, and synthesize data from a variety of sources (e.g., print and non-print texts, artifacts, people) to communicate their discoveries in ways that suit their purpose and audience.

8. Students use a variety of technological and information resources (e.g., libraries, databases, computer networks, video) to gather and synthesize information and to create and communicate knowledge.

9. Students develop an understanding of and respect for diversity in language use, patterns, and dialects across cultures, ethnic groups, geographic regions, and social roles.

10. Students whose first language is not English make use of their first language to develop competency in the English language arts and to develop understanding of content across the curriculum.

11. Students participate as knowledgeable, reflective, creative, and critical members of a variety of literary communities.

12. Students use spoken, written, and visual language to accomplish their own purposes (e.g., for learning, enjoyment, persuasion, and the exchange of information).

"I'm one of the few—if there are any more—people moderately literate who take the detective story seriously. I don't mean that I necessarily take my own or anybody else's seriously—but the detective story as a form. Some day somebody's going to make 'literature' of it ... and I'm selfish enough to have my hopes."
